Froning, Leblanc-Bazinet Lead CrossFit Games After 10 Events

Carson, California, July 26, 2014—After three days and 10 events, only a select few athletes are still in the running to win the CrossFit Games.

A familiar name is atop the men's standings: Three-time Games champ Rich Froning has 627 points despite poor performances earlier in the week.

On Saturday, Froning never finished lower than 14th, and he took second in the final event of the night. His trademark consistency was absent on Day 2 of the Games but looks to have returned at the right time.

Games rookie Mathew Fraser is second with 620 points, and Josh Bridges has 615 after winning the final event of the night.

Previous overall leader Noah Ohlsen is now fourth with 597 points. Tommy Hackenbruck has 589 points in fifth, and the rest of the field sits 22 or more points back.

On the women's side, overall leader Camille Leblanc-Bazinnet is first overall (700 points), Kara Webb is second (625 points), and 2011 and 2012 champion Annie Thorisdottir is third (583 points). Two other athletes are within 2 points of third, making the race for the podium incredibly tight.

The 75-point gap between first and second is significant, and Leblanc-Bazinnet will be looking to finish strong and become the first Canadian woman to stand on the CrossFit Games podium. The 2013 champion, Samantha Briggs, did not qualify, so it's certain a new athlete will be named Fittest on Earth on Sunday.

As of press time, only one Day 4 event had been announced, leaving competitors to wonder what challenges they'll face on Sunday as the CrossFit Games conclude.
